HOMES FOR OUR AMBASSADORS.

A report that comes from London that the United States Government is looking at a London house, with a view to buying it for the residence of its Ambassador, ought to be true, though possibly it is not. The duty of buying houses in foreign capitals for his Ambassadors and Ministers is one that Uncle Sam has neglected unconscionably long. It is so clearly sensible and expedient that it is surprising that it was not done long ago; but, for that matter, it is surprising that the Ambassadors' salaries have not been increased. Possibly the necessity of providing a safe and permanent home for the American legation at Peking will serve as a precedent for acquiring real estate in other capitals; but whenever the houses are bought, adequate provision should be made for the support of our representatives who are to live up to them. The labor of finding and hiring a furnished house in a foreign city ought not to be imposed any longer on our Ambassadors. It wastes time and strength and thought, which are needed for other more important uses.—E. S. Martin, in Harper's Weekly.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS NOTES.

Interesting statistics have just been issued by the German postal authorities. The German craze for sending illustrated postal cards showing views of cities and landscapes is well known in this country. To what extent this custom has grown may be gathered from the fact that during one single week no less than 10,128,569 such cards were sent through the German mail.
These 10,000,000 cards, a German contemporary says, would, if piled up, form a column 11,468 feet high. Their weight exceeds thirty-six tons.

There is perhaps but one school in the whole world whose pupils are all princesses. The school is conducted by an English lady, and is at Bangkok, the capital of Siam, the land of the white elephant. The school has at present fifteen pupils, all of whom are members of the royal family. The age of the princesses varies from ten to fifteen years.

Sven Hedin, the famous Swedish explorer, has discovered in the Gobi desert about 160 miles from Chotan, an ancient city entirely buried in the sand of the desert. Sven Hedin was taken to the place by natives, who call the ruins Thakia Mukan. About a hundred dwellings are well preserved; they are built of wood, and doors and walls are highly ornamented with fine carvings.
Sven Hedin found several Buddha temples, which also were fairly well preserved.

A German contemporary reports that extensive petroleum deposits have recently been discovered in the district of Chi Litching. The oil is mixed with water, and is said to be of a fair quality.

CATCHING CRABS.

The hard crab business has begun early this season, according to an Oxford, Md., special in the Baltimore Post. The crabs are small but very fat.
There will be soft-shell crabs in abundant supply during the increase of the May moon, that is, after the 18th, the day of the next new moon.

Chicago is the farthest point away to which crab meat is shipped. Most of it is sold in the East, near the seaboard.
Philadelphia is said to be the greatest crab market in the world. There is a great demand for hard-crab meat at summer resorts, and it is a singular fact that most of this trade comes from seaside resorts, and very little of it from mountain or other inland resorts.
